Chanler at Cliff Walk

NEWPORT, RI

There are only twenty rooms at the Chanler, built in 1873 as a private summer home. Each guest room is individually named and designed--some reflect a French Provincial style, others have Greek revival details--though all are luxuriously appointed with heated bathroom floors, wet bars, and antique prints or original oil paintings. Reservations are strongly recommended at the Chanler's well-regarded restaurant, Spiced Pear. The kitchen opens up to an elegant dining room with Atlantic Ocean views; organic, seasonal New England fare includes zinfandel-poached pear and Maine diver scallops served with a sunchoke puree.
